ATTENTION IN THE AREA, ATTENTION OFF POST

For over 60 years Alumni have been supporting NMMI and the Corps of Cadets through varying opportunities, whether it be time, knowledge, or financial contributions. We can not begin to thank you enough for the support throughout the years and the impact this has had on Alumni like yourselves as well as current and future cadets. Early discussions with the Alumni Relations staff has led us to the focal point of providing information to each and every one of you that helps define and provide a foundation of what the basic expectation of an alumnus is and the avenues that can be taken advantage of to continue providing an impact.

The purpose of Alumni is to help provide an anchor towards the future for all cadets as well a bridge between traditions and an evolving society. Involvement can take many shapes, forms and have varying degrees of meaning but at its core it means to "participate", this can be done by attending events both Alumni sponsored or school sponsored, sending in updates, making a donation to the annual fund or another endowment, sharing news on social media and using your experience to help generate interests of future potential cadets. Alumni provide a great source of enrollment, ideas, support, and assistance as well as a medium through with an overview of historical perspective of the NMMI experience can be gained.

The Scheid's visit to NMMI

On Thursday, March 27, 2025, the Alumni Relations Office was joined by Gerald Scheid ('55HS) and his wife, Carrie, from Idaho. We (as a staff) and the Scheid's have been looking forward to this visit since the fall, when their visit was canceled due to the Roswell Flood. Gerald's last visit to the Institute was over a decade ago, and while in the grand scheme of NMMI's history, that seems like a drop in the bucket, however, so much has changed on Post. Since his last visit, Bates Hall was remodeled (and is currently under construction), the Infirmary, Pearson Auditorium, the bowling Alley and the PX were all remodeled; the Cadet Store was moved; Cahoon Armory was remodeled from the ground up and has become a gem in athletics, and the Intermediate Preparatory Academy (IPA), NMMI's middle school have opened. It was also Gerry's first visit to the Daniel's Leadership Center, seeing the Ropes Course and Leadership Challenge course. We were regaled with cadet stories from the 50's. Gerald got a good look at cadet life during lunch at Bates, and while many things have changed, hungry cadets remain.

Gerald and Carrie joined local alumni at The Liberty, Inc. that evening for our quarterly after-hours. Joe Mainello ('55SC) and his son, Mike Mainello ('79JC), were able to catch up with Gerry and reminisce about the Corp of Cadets in the '50s and get an update on NMMI from President/Superintendent Brigadier General Voris McBurnette.

Thank you, Gerald and Carrie, for spending a fun day with us!

LEGACY AT NMMI

Honoring the Past, Shaping the Future

Legacy at NMMI is more than just a connection to the past; it's a living, breathing tradition. For legacy cadets, the link to the Institute runs deep, not only because they follow in the footsteps of their parents or relatives but because they are actively shaping NMMI's future. This bond goes beyond the halls and uniforms, it's a shared understanding of values, discipline, and honor.

At NMMI, legacy cadets are celebrated for their unique connection to the Institute. The Alumni Relations Office hosts a special dinner each semester to honor these cadets and their families, recognizing the lasting impact of multi-generational ties to NMMI.

Voices of Legacy Cadets

This is what several legacy cadets had to say about their experiences and how their family history has shaped their time at NMMI.

Cadet Octavian Chavez, a senior and First Sergeant of Bravo Troop, shared how his father's role at NMMI inspired him to reach similar heights. "When my father was at NMMI, he was First Sergeant. That motivated me to achieve the same goal. I'm proud to say I realized that during my senior year." Cadet 1SG Chavez is now headed to West Point, furthering his education and leadership development.

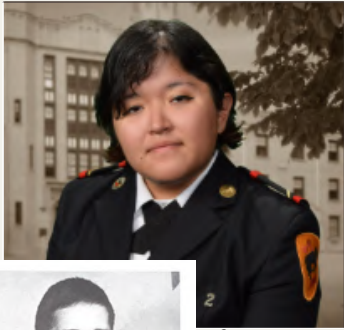

Cadet Valeria Herrera, whose family has a long history at NMMI, reflected on the pressure that comes with being a legacy cadet. "It feels intense, there's an expectation set, and standards set. That at times can be very overwhelming." Despite this pressure, she is driven by a sense of duty to uphold the traditions of her family. She expressed that her father and brother both went through NMMI and learned a lot from their experiences. One thing they passed down was a deep respect for NMMI's standards, especially the tradition of not tolerating dishonorable behavior. Cadet SGT Herrera also sees her role as more than just continuing a family tradition. "We have a role to uphold higher standards. It's our job to show compassion, help fellow cadets, and set an example for those who come after us."

For Cadet Mia Martinez, the connection to NMMI runs even deeper. "I feel proud to follow in my dad's footsteps. He taught me everything I needed to succeed as a RAT before matriculation. He taught me how to square my corners, the Goss Quote, and how to properly address superiors." This mentorship from her father made her transition to NMMI smoother and instilled in her a strong sense of discipline. "I believe Silver Taps is one of the most important traditions at NMMI," Cadet 1LT Martinez added, referring to the solemn event where cadets and alumni honor fallen comrades. "It brings cadets and alumni together and allows them to grieve the loss of the fallen alumni together. I think this tradition should be carried on for many years to come so everyone can honor the alumni we've lost and feel that sense of unity."

Both Cadet 1LT Martinez and Cadet SGT Herrera spoke on their independent decision to attend NMMI regardless of their family's influence. They recognized the value of NMMI. Cadet 1LT Martinez shared, "I was a RAT in August 2022, and I chose to come here because it was something different. My dad being an alumni helped with my decision, but it was not the deciding factor. I liked how different NMMI was, and I wanted to try something new. After my time here at the institute, I plan on going to college to study political science and law."

Luis came to NMMI because it was a family tradition. His father graduated here in 1977. Since he's been here, he's been a member of the Centurions, took first place in the Sally Port drill down, was the outstanding RAT from his troop for a semester, and a 2LT in Lima troop. Next year he plans to attend New Mexico State, or Sam Houston State, to major in criminal justice. Favorite Quote: "Do it, but don't get caught." (Tour Squad motto).

Shaping the Future

For these cadets, being part of a legacy means more than just living up to family expectations. It's about carrying forward NMMI's traditions, setting an example for others, and contributing to the growth and future of the Institute. Whether by excelling in leadership roles, honoring NMMI's traditions, or helping fellow cadets succeed, legacy cadets continue to define what it means to be part of the NMMI family.

As these cadets move forward, whether to prestigious military academies, universities, or into careers, they leave behind a legacy of their own, ensuring that the values and traditions of NMMI remain strong for generations to come.

EMPLOYEE LUNCHEON CELEBRATES DEDICATION AND COMMUNITY

NMMI ALUMNI RELATIONS | ALUMNIOFFICE@NMMI.EDU

AROUND POST

On April 8th, the New Mexico Military Institute hosted a special luncheon to honor employees who generously contribute to funding for cadets. The event was a heartfelt celebration of the staff and faculty whose personal donations help support scholarships, events, and essential resources for cadet success.

Brigadier General McBurnette gave a powerful and sincere speech, expressing his deep appreciation for the ongoing commitment of NMMI employees. He emphasized how every contribution—no matter the size—makes a meaningful impact on the lives of the young men and women in the Corps of Cadets.

Adding an emotional touch to the event, several cadets gave moving testimonials. They spoke with genuine gratitude about how the support they've received has helped shape their journey at NMMI. Their words served as a living reminder of the difference employee giving makes every day.

This luncheon was not just a thank-you—it was a celebration of generosity, community, and the shared mission of building tomorrow's leaders. Thank you to all who give in support of our cadets. Your generosity makes a lasting difference.

A big congrats to our NMMI STEM cadets for their standout performance at the New Mexico State Science Fair on April 12!
